Different cultures follow their own special customs when a child's baby teeth fall out. In Korea, for example, they have the custom of throwing lost teeth up on the roof of a house. According to tradition, a magpie will come and take the tooth. Later, the magpie will return with a new tooth for the child. In other Asian countries, such as Japan and Vietnam, children follow a similar tradition of throwing their lost teeth onto the roofs of houses.

Birds aren't the only animals thought to take lost teeth. In Mexico and Spain, tradition says a mouse takes a lost tooth and leaves some money. However, in Mongolia, dogs are considered guardian angles of the people. Tradition says that the new tooth will grow good and strong if the baby tooth is fed to a guarangel. Accordingly, parents in Mongolia will put their child's lost tooth in a piece of meat and feed it to a dog.

A. long before bedtime

The idea of giving lost teeth to an angle or fairy is also a tradition in the West. Many children in Western countries count on the Tooth Fairy to leave money or presents in exchange for a tooth. The exact origins of the Tooth Fairy are a mystery, althought the story probably began in England or Ireland centuries ago. According to tradition, a child puts a lost tooth under his or her pilow before going to bed. In the wee hours, while the child is sleeping, the Tooth Fairy leaves a small gift. In the United States, however, the Tooth Fairy usually leaves money. These days, the rate is $1 to $5 oer

Read the following passage and mark letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 43 to 50.

Earth is richly supplied with different types of living organisms which co-exist in their environments, forming complex, interrelated communities. Living organisms depend on one another for nutrients, shelter, and other benefits. The extinction of one species can set off a chain reation that affects many other species, particular insect or plant might seem inconsequential. However, there may be fish or small animals that depend on that resource for foodstuffs. The loss can threaten the survival of these creatures and larger predators that prey upon them. Extinction can have a ripple effect that spreads throughout nature.

In addition to its biological consequences, extinction poses a moral dilemma for humans, the only species capable of saving the others. The presence of humans on the planet has affected all other life forms, particularly plants and animals. Human lifestyles have proven to be incompatible with the survival of some other pecies. Purposeful efforts have been made to eliminate animals that prey on people, livestock, crops, or pose any threat to human livelihoods. Some wild animals have been decimated by human desire for meat, hides, fur or other body parts with commercial value. Likewise, demand for land, water, and other natural resources has left many wild plants and animals with little to nos suitable habitat. Humans have also affected nature by introducing non – native species to local areas and producing pollutants having a negative impact on the envitonment. The combination of these human-related effects and natural obstacles such as disease or low birthrates has proven to be too much for some species to overcome. They have no chance of survival without human help.

As a result, societies have difficult choices to make about shout the amount of effort and money they are willing to spend to save imperiled species. Will people accept limits on their property rights, recreational activitives, and means of livelihood to save a plant or an animal? Should saving such popular species as whales and dolphins take priority over saving obscure, annoying, or fearful species? Is it the responsibilty of humans to save every kind of life form from disappearing, or is extinction an inevitabe part of nature, in which the strong survive and the weak perish? These are some difficult questions that people face as they ponder the fate of other species living on this planet,
